JP/LS-3 Roundtable: War, Law, and the Presidency

Moderator: Matthew A. Pauley, Manhattanville College

Forty five years after the publication of Henry Paolucci's book War, Peace, and the Presidency, the Presidency, the Constitution, and War are still very much in the public eye. With the ongoing war and terror, new questions are ever raised about the constitutional prerogatives of the President and the role of the Chief Executive in our presidential government by discussion.

Participants:

Thomas Rozinski, Touro College, New York, Thomas.Rozinski@touro.edu

Nicholas Clark, Susquehanna University, PA, clarkn@susqu.edu

Noel Hubler, Lebanon Valley College, PA, hubler@lvc.edu

This roundtable explores several approaches to the teaching of Plato's Socratic dialogues in undergraduate political theory courses. Methods include the use of music as a reinforcement of textual themes, the use of Platonic dialogue to teach techniques of political argumentation, the employment of simulations of scenes described or alluded to in the text, student multimedia group presentations, group performance of student-authored skits thematically-derived from a Platonic text, the "flipping" of larger-sized classes to minimize in-class lecturing, and the use of pre-circulated student-generated questions to "drive" class discussions of assigned texts. The panelists will also consider adjustments in teaching methodologies due to the composition and size of class.
